ALESSANDRA AMBROSIO

Born in Erechim, Brazil, to parents of Italian and Polish descent, Alessandra Ambrosio nurtured her desire to become a model from a young age. She emerged into the international modeling world as a part of the Brazilian invasion in the late 90's. Best known as one of the longest-reigning Victoria's Secret Angels, Alessandra launched her career as the first ambassador for the Victoria's Secret Pink collection and continued working with the brand for 17 years. However, her work with VS is only a drop in the pond to all that she has accomplished.

Alessandra has been the face and global brand ambassador for fashion and beauty brands, including Omega, Balmain, Dolce & Gabbana, Moschino, Revlon, Christian Dior, Oscar de la Renta, Calvin Klein, and Ralph Lauren. Throughout her career, Alessandra has walked in runway shows for some of the biggest names in fashion, such as Marc Jacobs, Prada, Balmain, Dolce & Gabbana and Louis Vuitton. She has graced the covers of hundreds of international magazines, including Vogue, Harper's Bazaar, Cosmopolitan, Vanity Fair, GQ, Elle, and Rolling Stone.

In addition to her distinguished career in the fashion industry, Alessandra has also made multiple cameos in films and TV shows including Daddy's Home, Daddy's Home 2, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles: Out of the Shadows, Casino Royale, "Entourage," "New Girl," "How I Met Your Mother," "Gossip Girl" and Brazilian show "Hidden Truths."

Dedicated to making a difference beyond the fashion realm, Alessandra serves as an ambassador for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, a cause deeply personal to her. She is also a passionate advocate for environmental causes, particularly ocean conservation, actively supporting the #Togetherband movement to promote the United Nation's 17 Global Goals.

While maintaining an illustrious career in front of the cameras and beyond, Alessandra is also a devoted mother to daughter Anja and son Noah and has learned to balance a demanding career as well as her #1 job of being a loving mother.

When the house finally came on the market two years ago, Scott—besotted with its compact proportions and inventive detailing—swooped. The architect, a great proponent of indoor-outdoor living, had conceived the apostrophe-shaped pool to curl into the living room, where an extraordinary wall (with built-in sofa, shelves, and side tables) swings open through a system of hydraulics to the outdoor terrace to reveal sweeping views, from the distant high-rises of downtown Los Angeles to the ocean. (The house also commands views across the valley on the other side. “On the Fourth of July, I was watching fireworks on both sides,” Scott says. “It was amazing.”)

Scott brought in his friend the restoration architect Mark Haddawy to landscape the property, which is now embowered in a jungle of succulents and mature palms. Inside, Scott kept the furnishings simple, allowing the space-efficient architecture—conceived by Lautner with the help of a yacht builder—to sing. In the living room, for instance, apart from Lautner’s original built-ins, Scott eschewed formal furnishings, merely scattering a trio of shaggy Mongolian-lamb beanbags. His bibelots give more of a clue to his tastes, including some Memphis-era pieces, the African tribal fetishes that he finds profoundly

Victoria's Secret model Alessandra Ambrosio on her travel fitness routine and family holidays

How do you stay fit and healthy on the road?

I try to exercise in the morning before work. When I'm in Los Angeles I go to SoulCycle, Plates Platinum and The Bar Method, and when travelling I use the hotel gym. I don't deny myself anything when it comes to food, but I make sure the portions are not huge and that every meal is well balanced.

What are your travel beauty essentials?

I always carry a good hand lotion, water mist spray from Mimi Luzon and Charlotte Tilbury Lip Magic Rejuvenating Balm to keep my skin hydrated and glowing.

What do you pack first?

I am fortunate I get to travel to many exotic, warm locations, so the first thing I pack is one of my fave by Alessandra swimsuits because I always try to find some time to relax by the pool or beach.

Do you have any packing tips?

Invest in a great suitcase; spending a little extra makes a big difference. I find my Rimowa luggage stylish and practical—they come in different sizes, never bend out of shape and have dividers that keep everything in the place.

How do you relax when travelling?

I love listening to music. You'll often see me with my headphones on while traveling. I also like to catch up on movies while in the air.

What's your favourite city?

Los Angeles, as it's my home town now. I love that it's always sunny and that the beach is never far away. I enjoy spending time with my children in Santa Monica. We often rent bikes to ride by the beach and we visit Santa Monica Pier, where my kids love to go on the rides and play at the arcade.

Where do you travel to with your family?

Our last family vacation was in Mykonos—we had the most amazing time. We all love the water and outdoor activities and there is so much to do there. We went jet-skiing, paddle boarding, relaxed by the beach and enjoyed great food at Scorpios and Nammos. We usually rent a house, but last year we stayed at Santa Marina and it was wonderful, with all the amenities you need while on vacation and the most amazing view.

What are the must-dos for visitors to Brazil?

It depends on where you go as each city has its charms. The beaches in Rio are beautiful and the city has great shopping. You can't beat Rio sunsets and the energy. I love to listen to samba bands and do some stand-up paddling on Ipanema Beach. I also like to hike the amazing Pedra da Gávea. During the winter holidays, I go to Trancoso, a small fishing village located in Bahia, on the east coast of Brazil. It's very hippie and simple yet chic and charming.

Where would you like to visit next?

I have never been to India and there's so much culture and history there that I'd like to explore. I wouldn't know where to start but I definitely want to visit Delhi, the Taj Mahal in Agra and Amritsar to see the Golden Temple.

VANITY FAIR

There's a lot to like about the Instagram account of Victoria's Secret model, philanthropist and all-round perfect human Alessandra Ambrosio. You will see, for instance, pictures of her on the cover of magazines (flame emoji), pictures of her walking the catwalk at Thanksgiving with large feathers protruding from her posterior (chicken emoji) and a picture of her nude, lying on a bed, smiling (an emoji hasn't been invented for this yet). But it was one of her more standard selfies (lipstick emoji) that recently got the model into trouble. In it, the 34-year-old may have claimed there was no filter (via a hashtag, #nofilter), but she didn't mention the extra lighting — two professional-grade lighting strips, providing only slightly less illumination than most Premier League stadium floodlights, either side of the phone, a setup that could clearly be seen in the reflection of the mirror behind her. Busted.

Which was a bit like saying she was seen with a face. She's a Victoria's Secret model — did we really expect her to look anything but her best?

And we're about to see a lot more of that perfect face, as the catwalk model — the eighth highest earning in the world according to a recent Forbes poll — is about to take the plunge into film, starring in the knockabout comedy Daddy's Home alongside Will Ferrell and Mark Wahlberg. Details of her part are being kept strictly under wraps, but we're guessing that it won't be a huge shock. We're calling it: The Hot One. Stuart McGuire

What are your best memories of childhood?

When I was growing up, my mother instilled in me that women can do anything. She taught me to believe in my dreams and to fight for them. Seeing her dedication to my sister and me, I've learned the importance of family and hard work.

How do you find work-life balance?

My children are always going to be my number-one priority, so I work hard on arranging my schedule to spend as much time as possible with them.

Alessandra Ambrosio to Front Hair-Care Line Marajó

- The Brazilian model is the brand ambassador for the new line, made with oil from a nut indigenous to the island of Marajó.

BY MARCY MEDINA

Brazilian model and fashion entrepreneur Alessandra Ambrosio has signed on as the face and brand ambassador for a new hair care line based on ingredients from her native country. Marajó, named for a fresh water island off the coast of Brazil, is home to the pracaxi nut, whose oil is known for its healing and softening properties.

Now, Guthy Renker has made cold-pressed pracaxi oil the main ingredient in its new brand, which will be available at Sephora and sephora.com, QVC and Marajo.com this week. The five-piece, paraben-free lineup includes a nourishing cleansing cream and deep treatment butter meant to be used as a daily shampoo and conditioner, plus three styling products: a blow-out styling cream, a 3-in-1 finishing spray and an antifrizz smoothing serum. Each product comes in two sizes and various bundles ranging from prices of $29 to $49. The blow-out styling cream will be exclusive to QVC.

"Brazil has so many ingredients for skin and hair. Pracaxi is very nourishing, kind of like a new miracle oil," said Ambrosio, who has been testing the products for the last year. She said she has "always been a fan" of Guthy Renker products, and when she met with the company via mutual friends, she thought, "What they were promising sounded really good."

"Everyone wants beautiful, shiny hair, but there are many types of hair, so I was curious if it would work on everyone. I fell in love with the way it made my hair feel but I also gave it to friends to try," she said.

It seems natural that the popularity of blow-outs and hair coloring would spawn more product lines dedicated to repairing the damage to hair follicles caused by heat and chemicals. For hair that endures daily blow-drying, heat styling and coloring, Marajó aims to smooth and soften split ends while helping to prevent breakage. The styling products, however, can be used on wet or dry hair.

"Most of my clients don't blow-dry their hair at home," said celebrity hairstylist Dan Sharp, Marajó's global brand educator. "But at the salon we've seen an increase in the number of smoothing, shine and deep-conditioning treatments because of the growing popularity of the balayage coloring technique, which can be very drying because it's essentially putting bleach on the ends of the hair."

Ambrosio echoed, "My hair goes through constant blow-drying and styling, and even my hairdresser says it feels softer now. The products don't take the volume out of your hair, like many softening products tend to do."

Sharp said the Marajó line is straightforward enough for people to use at home. "You have your shampoo and conditioner, which you can leave on longer as a deep treatment. The blow-out styling cream is a great multitasker, and women either like a spray or a serum depending on their hair texture," he said. "Plus, it smells like a tropical vacation."

At Thursday's Hollywood launch party, which will be hosted by Ambrosio and feature a Brazilian carnival theme, guests will be able to try the line with mini blowouts and styling sessions.

BY JEAN E. PALMIERI

Jordache is all grown up.

In 2018, the denim brand will celebrate its 40th anniversary, and as it works to finalize the plans for next year's milestone, it's focusing on the task at hand — its fall marketing campaign.

For the campaign, which will launch mid-month, Jordache has turned to Brazilian model, actress and entrepreneur Alessandra Ambrosio, who will appear with her eight-year-old daughter, Anja. They will be the new faces of the company's women's and girls' collections and mark the first mother-daughter duo to feature in a Jordache campaign.

Jordache was founded in 1978 by Joe, Ralph and Avi Nakash and with its sexy fit and marketing campaigns was one of the leaders of the designer denim movement in the Eighties and Nineties. The brand now has a core collection that it sells at Wal-Mart as well as a higher-priced

The supermodel has been traveling up California's Highway 1 with her two children. The route, which roughly stretches from Los Angeles to San Francisco, is considered one of the best drives in the world, thanks to its spectacular Pacific Ocean views.

Which, for anyone who follows Ambrosio on Instagram, is very apparent. She's been posting—and geotagging—all her stops along the way. Like a seaside cliff in Pismo Beach at golden hour, or her two children at a Santa Barbara harbor.

But it was above the neck that the Brazilian beauty really drove the retro-inspired look home.

That's why the supermodel, along with her sister Aline and best friend Gisele Cória, created a new swimwear collection, GAL Floripa. The name, which was born from their first initials, also pays homage to the "Magic Island" of Brazil where Ambrosio likes to spend her summer holidays. With a focus on sustainability (delivering pieces in fabric bags rather than plastic, and sourcing durable, environmentally friendly materials), and taking inspiration from "Mother Nature's elements, flows, and magic," Ambrosio worked with her sister and Cória to create a collection that would work for everyone. "We believe that women should empower one another, respect their needs, embrace their feminine features, and help each other feel comfortable and amazing in their own skin," Ambrosio told W. This year, instead of her typical at-home Easter party, Ambrosio brought her family and friends to Montage Los Cabos for a destination trip. Here, the supermodel shares her tips and must-haves for the ultimate beach vacation via personal Polaroids of her family's chic holiday.

Alessandra Ambrosio Takes AD Inside Her Southern California Home

In the dining room, an antique Moroccan pendant illuminates a table and chairs by Thomas Hayes Studio.

In the age of the #MeToo movement, is it still kosher to describe a woman renowned across the globe for her beauty and allure as a Brazilian bombshell? When the subject is supermodel Alessandra Ambrosio, it just seems coy to use a more demure descriptor. Ambrosio has been ranked as one of the highest-earning fashion models for years, and her name routinely turns up in popular media on lists of the world's sexiest and most beautiful women. She has walked the runway and appeared in advertisements for myriad titans of couture, and she has parlayed that success into business ventures of her own, including her Ále by Alessandra fashion and lifestyle brand. In 2017, she announced her retirement from the annual Victoria's Secret fashion spectacle after lighting up the catwalk for 17 years.

"I travel constantly for work, but when I'm not on the road, I just want to be at home with my kids," Ambrosio says, describing her love affair with the Los Angeles-area dream house she shares with her ten-year-old daughter, Anja, and her six-year-old son, Noah. Her 1920s residence in Santa Monica is a quintessentially Angeleno Spanish Colonial Revival design. "I come from a small town in Brazil, and Santa Monica has a similar vibe. I had to be near the beach, someplace where you can feel and smell the ocean breeze. This is my paradise," she explains.

Alessandra Ambrosio Basically Turned Cannes Into Her Own Victoria's Secret Fashion Show

Alessandra Ambrosio basically staged her own one-woman runway at the Cannes Film Festival. Attending the premiere of Les Misérables on May 15, the model wore a dramatic Julien Macdonald gown featuring a lot of eye-catching elements with its halter neckline, silk chiffon cape, and high leg-baring slit. Alessandra completed her look with a pair of gold strappy Giuseppe Zanotti sandals, red teardrop earrings, gold rings, and a tassel bracelet.

The complete look ended up being one of her sexiest to date — and that's saying a lot, considering she used to be a freaking Victoria's Secret Angel. Alessandra was clearly feeling it, too, as she twirled and flung her cape all along the red carpet. See photos of the memorable Cannes fashion moment ahead.

WHO WHAT WEAR

Alessandra Ambrosio Told Us Her Favorite Bra Trend (and I'm Buying It ASAP)

It only takes a glance at her impressive modeling résumé to see Alessandra Ambrosio knows a thing or two about lingerie and swimwear, so it was only fitting that cult German brand Lascana tapped her to appear in its newest campaign. I recently caught up with Ambrosio in Los Angeles during Lascana's first foray into the U.S., and she was more than willing to spill her best lingerie tips. First up on the docket? Her favorite bra trend right now, and she was quick to call out one style in particular.

"Lascana has these amazing bras that have beautiful lace details. You can wear [your blouse] a little bit open so you can have a peek [at the bra] because it's so beautiful," she told us. "The lace is gorgeous, so that is my favorite."
